MIKE LOSES TEMPER;
HITS COP; ARRESTED;
THEN FINDS AUTO GONE

International News Service:
CLEVELAND, O., May 15.—Michael O'Boyle was cranking his automobile when Patrolman Preuh came along and, to make conversation, asked him what he was doing. O'Boyle had cranked long enough to have ragged his temper and responded by throwing a pack- age at Preuh, who took him to the station for disorderly conduct. O'Boyle paid bail and then went back to his machine only to find that some one had taken a hand in the argument and he had lost the car. O'Boyle, besides all this hard luck, has to stand trial for his failure to be pleasant with the "cop," when the latter tried to be friendly with him.

OFFICER-TO-BE APHASIA VICTIM

Saves Girl's Life in Runaway
But Injury Causes Loss of Memory.

CAMP SHERMAN, O., May 14.—Sergt. Almon P. Young, Purdue university man and graduate of the third officers' training camp, a man who is high up in the list of those recommended for commission as second lieutenants, today cannot tell dress from squad right. His case presents one of the most puzzling situations in military annals.

It was only a few days ago that Young won a cherished certificate of graduation in the artillery branch of the school, and went back home to Indiana on a furlough to rest up before reporting to his new command at Camp Gordon, Atlanta, Ga. He was walking up the street to his home, head proudly erect and eyes fixed on the service star in the window ahead, when the rapid tatter of horse's feet on the stone pavement drew his attention.

As the horse came tearing up the street, the agonized scream of the girl rider who had lost control awoke Sergt. Young into action. Dropping his traveling bag, he dashed into the street and grabbed the horse by the bits. He was dragged along the street for several hundred feet and finally dashed to the pavement.

The girl slid safely to the ground and bent over the prostrate form of her hero in olive drab; as his senses slowly returned and his eyes opened his memory slipped away.

"Aphasia," the physicians call it—a term applied to indicate a condition in which the function of expressing ideas by articulate sound is arrested, perverted or destroyed, in consequence of lesion of the brain. Young's family and his pals here who worked, slept and ate with him during the long 15 weeks of intensive training have another word for it—tragedy. For Young's military knowledge seems to have slipped entirely away. He smiles at officers, but does not salute them; the sight of the Stars and Stripes, and the notes of the national anthem arouse no patriotic feeling in his breast.

His parents did everything they could to bring back their boy's memory. They had a buffet come in the house and blow the various notes but Young looked unconcerned; revile and retreat sounded the same to him; he looked at mess kits as if they were something new to him, and even tents did not bring back recollection of the old days put in on the artillery range. And now they are bringing Sergt. Young back to Camp Sherman. He will be given his old bunk in section K, thrown in with his old instructor, Capt. Herman Archer, and it is hoped old associations will react on his memory.

And if they don't, Uncle Sam is up against it, and when his turn is reached in the commission list, Young probably will be commissioned and honorably discharged.
